Philip Dowell

Philip Dowell was born December 3, 1864, in Attica, Indiana.¹ Hailing from Galva, Illinois, Dowell entered Augustana as a freshman in 1876 enrolled in the classical course. It appears that Philip entered the institution much earlier than his other classmates, which is why he was at school for so long.²

Philip was the son of John Franz Oscar Dowell, a Lutheran minister of Swedish heritage.³ He pursued his post-college education from a variety of schools, including Hope Academy, Upsala College, Muhlenburg College, and Yale University; as well as in high schools such as Curtis and Port Richmond in New York. He obtained his PhD in Botany in 1900 from Muhlenburg College.⁴ On August 29, 1894, he married Anna Servina Albertina Dorthea Halland.⁵ During his marriage, he had four children, but unfortunately lost one at a young age. His wife died in 1930, while he died June 25, 1936. Dowell was a botanist who studied ferns, violets, and other plants. He has many published papers in the Herbarium of the New York Botanical Garden and was an editor for the American Fern Journal. He also belonged to a variety of science based clubs, including the Torrey Botanical Club, the Staten Island Academy of Sciences, and was the President of the American Fern Society for one year. Along with his involvement in various science groups, he was also an assistant at the United States National Museum.⁶

While attending Augustana College, it was found that Dowell attended the First Lutheran Church of Moline.⁷ In the church record book, the date December 4, 1864 is provided under the birth column; however, we have found many different sources to list his birthdate as December 3, 1864. While this may be an error in the record taking, it may also be the date he was baptized and the records are just not carefully taken. Also found in the record book is Dowell's name crossed off. This simply depicts that he eventually left the church, which he did when he moved to New York.⁸ Unfortunately, the registration card for Dowell could not be located. This source would have provided information on his parents, his previous school institutions, and rewarded financial aid.

Following his time at Augustana College, Philip Dowell moved to New York. Many of his accomplishments are recorded in issues of the Augustana Observer and the Rockey-I yearbook. Dowell started his path teaching botany at Curtis High School in Staten Island, NY.⁹ Later, Dowell became an honorary curator of the Staten Island Institute of Arts and Sciences.¹⁰ The college was able to stay in touch with Dowell and noted that he was a chairman of the publication committee at the Institute as well.¹¹ Recognized as a doctor and professor, Dowell contributed to the Augustana Alumni Scholarship Fund so as not to forget his roots.¹²

Philip Dowell was one of the few members of the 1885 class that did not originate from Sweden, which made finding information about him quite difficult. Augustana has many helpful records about Swedish immigrants and their history, but it was not the most helpful for this alum. Upon visiting the Swenson Center and the Swedish Immigration Library, information and sources of the alum were found. However, they did not dig deep into his heritage and upbringing. These sources included basic information such as the day he was born, which churches he belonged to, and the record of his attendance at Augustana College. The Swedish Immigration Library did help us find information about his wife's family, whom were of Swedish descent. If given more time and resources, expanding Dowell's family tree would help with our findings, though public information is lacking. Additionally, we are seeking information on his children, but they do not seem to be accounted for in censuses or birth records that we know of.

Ancestors of Philip Dowell

Generation 1

1. Philip Dowell. For more information about Philip, see the biography in the main part above.

Generation 2

Questions for Further Research

If we were given more time to research the ancestors of Philip Dowell, we would try to find out more information about his grandmother and grandfather. When searching for his father, we found records of his grandparents, however we were unable to decipher their names and look further into them. If we had more time, we could search other sources to try and find them somewhere else and possibly view their names more clearly.

We would also look more into the lives of Philip's grandchildren. We were able to successfully find information about his immediate children and some names of his grandchildren, but we have not found any information about their birth dates, birth places, or how many children there are total. With more time to research, we could most likely trace his descendants even further.

Lastly, if given more time at the Swenson Center, we could research more about Philip's maternal great grandparents. Because we were able to find a substantial amount of information on his maternal grandparents through an article on the Internet, we believe we could trace his great grandparents in the Swedish records. This would provide a better idea of if Philip's descendants have always lived in Sweden, or if they emigrated to Sweden from a different country.

We have created a record for Philip Dowell in the Family Tree on FamilySearch. The record locator is LRZK-S4J.
