Dual Citizenship: Reflections on Educating Citizens at Augsburg College

Paul C. Pribbenow

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.augustana.edu/intersections

Augustana Digital Commons Citation
Available at: http://digitalcommons.augustana.edu/intersections/vol2009/iss29/4

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Augustana Digital Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in Intersections by an authorized administrator of Augustana Digital Commons. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@augustana.edu.
Dual Citizenship: Reflections on Educating Citizens at Augsburg College

And the Word became flesh... (John 1:14a)

From faith there flows a love and joy in the Lord. From love there proceeds a joyful, willing, and free mind that serves the neighbor and takes no account of gratitude or ingratitude, praise or blame, gain or loss. (Luther 83)

The old man rose and gazed into my face and said that I was now a dual citizen. He therefore desired me when I got home to consider myself a representative and to speak on their behalf in my own tongue. Their embassies, he said, were everywhere but operated independently and no ambassador would ever be relieved. (Heaney 277)

Three years ago, when I first learned that my predecessor as Augsburg’s president, Bill Frame, had decided to retire after nine successful years, I was intrigued by the possibility that I might be called to serve as Augsburg’s next president. It was a college with deep roots in the liberal arts; a strong and distinctive faith tradition; and a provocative (if aspirational) claim to pursue intentional diversity. But, above all, I was drawn to a college located in the midst of a thriving city neighborhood with a reputation for educating students for citizenship.

And I have not been disappointed. Called to serve as Augsburg’s tenth president—myself a product of Lutheran higher education in the liberal arts tradition, a social ethicist with a passion for the intersection of higher education and democracy, and an urbanist with a love for the diverse richness and messiness of life in the city—I could not feel more privileged by the opportunity I have been given to share in Augsburg’s mission-based work early in the twenty-first century. It is good and healthy and meaningful when individual and institutional vocations coincide, as I believe they have for me and Augsburg College.

That said, I also found myself intrigued by some of the pressing issues that were raised both during the presidential search process and in the first few months of my time on campus. In a variety of settings, I heard from students, faculty, staff, alumni, regents, parents and friends about myriad tensions they believed were present within the college: tensions between the church and the academy; between the traditional liberal arts and professional studies; between academic access and excellence; between the campus community and the city. I was not surprised so much by the fact that the tensions existed—I think we all would agree that such tensions are an abiding part of our work in the academy—but I was struck by the assumption in many of these conversations that the tensions needed to be resolved if we were to be successful.

I remember, in one striking instance, a faculty member pushing me during the search interview about where I would come down if it came to pass that the values of the church (supposedly the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America) came into an irresolvable conflict with the values of the college. She wanted to know whose side I would take in that fight. I assure you I gave the best “presidential” answer I could muster (read: not much of an answer at all), but thought to myself how fascinating it was that good, intelligent people could not imagine a way to hold such a conflict in creative and constructive trust. I wondered how that person imagined that people could live together in community, in neighborhood, even in democracy, without a tolerance for the inevitable messiness and conflict that characterizes common effort and purpose. I wondered how a college that genuinely believes in educating for citizenship could not recognize that the heart of that education needed to be about how to live in the midst of tensions that would not be resolved, only negotiated! In other words, I wondered how well Augsburg educated dual citizens, those able to live through the messiness of common work.

PAUL C. PRIBBENOW is president of Augsburg College in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

Apart from reminding these good folks that, as a Lutheran college, we were called to live with the paradoxes of life (how about simul justus et peccator?), I did wonder at how often these tensions were presented as conflicts that needed to be resolved once and for all. I imagine we all recognize the ways in which dichotomies become polarized, thereby losing their creative promise. I have come to recognize that our capacity to develop a narrative framework in which these tensions are lived—not just debated—is one of the central features of creating contexts for civic education. In other words, the daily life of places like Augsburg become genuine classrooms for democracy, not just because of what we teach (as important as this is) but also because of how we live our lives together.

I have long been a student of democracy and find Roman Catholic political theologian and philosopher, John Courtney Murray’s definition of democracy as “the intersection of conspiracies” especially instructive. The question is whether or not the inevitable tensions of life together can be reframed as intersections within an unfolding narrative that has synergistic and constructive power, and not how we do away with tension or conflict. The question is how do we teach and learn about how to navigate and negotiate these intersections.

The journalist and keen cultural observer Bill Moyers recently suggested that “Watching and listening to our public discourse today, I realize we are all ‘institutionalized’ in one form or another—locked away in our separate realities, our parochial loyalties, our fixed ways of seeing ourselves and others. For democracy to flourish, we need to escape those bonds and join what John Dewey called ‘a life of free and enriching communion’—an apt description of the conversation of democracy.” (89)

I would go further to suggest that, in order to escape the bonds Moyers describes, we need to become (and to help educate) what political ethicist Jean Bethke Elshtain has called “chastened patriots,” those who are able to navigate the various loyalties and realities of common life, loving critically if you will. Law professor (and novelist) Stephen Carter contends that one of the central rules of etiquette in democracy is that whenever we enter into conversation, we must be open to the possibility that we could be persuaded of someone else’s position. How do we teach and learn this sort of civic education, this openness to being a dual citizen, members of a particular culture and society, but also citizens of a wider community that is our home as well?

The good news is that Augsburg has a long history of addressing these intersections in our lives, theologically and academically, and thus there is a strong foundation upon which to consider how faith and reason, theory and practice, and the academy and world exist alongside each other in an overarching narrative that has both depth and breadth. And upon this foundation, we have the opportunity to explore and practice the daily practices of civic life, balancing sometimes competing interests, loyalties and conspiracies in healthy and constructive ways.

The early Augsburg presidents—August Weenas, Georg Sverdrup, Sven Oftedal and George Sverdrup—were learned and faithful theologians and pastors, whose strong love of Christ and the church were not separated from their sense of duty and vigilance for a free and well-functioning society. Bernhard Christensen, who served as Augsburg’s president from 1938-1962, was ahead of his time as a theologian who embraced the Christian mystics and the diversity of ecumenism even as he proclaimed his deep and firm faith that Christ was the true path to the divine. He also was ahead of his time as a citizen who served, for example, in Mayor Hubert Humphrey’s Minneapolis Human Rights Commission.

In the modern era, Augsburg presidents Oscar Anderson and Charles Anderson, respected theological scholars and leaders, turned their attention to the pressing needs of the city in the 1960s, 70s and 80s—to race relations, to urban renewal, to the resurgent immigrant trends, to poverty and crime in the streets—while also reaffirming Augsburg’s academic and theological principles in a new college motto, “From truth to freedom.”

It is only in recent years, though, during the tenure of William Frame, that the entire college community was called into conversation about the historical, theological and academic legacies that combine to offer Augsburg its distinctive vocation as a college of the church in the city. In two remarkable documents, Augsburg 2004: Extending the Vision and The Augsburg Vocation: Access and Excellence, the college community affirmed that:

If this were an epic, a work that recalls the past to locate the present and chart the future, we might wish to invoke as our muse Thales, truth-seeker and navigator... (We offer) a vision for the educational program at Augsburg College that connects the College’s past with its future. It submits that an Augsburg education can and will provide navigational skills: To the extent possible for any institution of higher education, Augsburg will develop graduates who will be prepared for life and work in a complex and increasingly globalized world; equipped to deal with its diversity of peoples, movements and opinions; experienced in the uses and limitations of technology; and possessed with a character and outlook influenced by a rich understanding of the Christian faith. (Engebretson and Griffin 1998: 2)

In other words, the college affirms its commitment to educating dual citizens who can navigate the inevitable tensions and intersections of life in the world as informed, nimble and faithful people.

So, the inevitable question for me is just what am I going to do as the current Augsburg president given this legacy and vision? Apart from not messing it up—which strikes me as a worthy goal!—I would suggest that my work at Augsburg is about helping the college community to figure out just how radical this vision is as a blueprint for citizenship and then offering whatever support I can muster to make it so.

And that takes me back to the questions I heard when I first arrived at Augsburg and to my concerns that the tensions people named as important for me to know (and by extension, I imagine, for me to resolve) were still very much present in the daily life and culture of the college—which is not in itself a surprise, but is a sign that the navigating and negotiation of these tensions was not always seen as part of the education we offered each other and our students. In other words, the “stuff” of educating citizens was right in front of us and we didn’t seem to fully grasp it.

As an aside, I want to lift up the fact that Augsburg’s curricular and co-curricular programs are increasingly aligned with this sense that students must learn how to navigate complex personal, professional, organizational and public worlds—certainly core components of a genuine civic education. We are a leader in service-learning and civic engagement programs in the city and around the world. We play a growing role in civic conversations in our region as we emphasize the gift of healthy public discourse. The college’s relatively new core curriculum offers opportunities for teaching and learning in the classroom, on campus, in the city and around the world that strike me as well-grounded in our mission and aspirational in our sense that vocation, caritas, community and civility are the requisite aspects of an education for service and citizenship.

That said, you might wonder why I don’t just sit back and enjoy all of this progress on so many fronts? And the truth is that I do honor and celebrate this remarkable vision and initiative, even as I pursue my strong contention that the daily life and work of the college demands greater attention as the context in which the work of educating citizens occurs. In other words, it is not good enough to claim victory on our aspirations when there are those who do not recognize the opportunities we have every day on our campus, in the neighborhood and around the world to be even more intentional, reflective and faithful in our distinctive calling as a college.

We therefore have returned to our envisioning work and have raised to the level of institutional values and vision the questions of how we all can learn to navigate these tensions creatively. We have begun to “translate,” if you will (an important concept for our work), the vocation and vision of Augsburg into the daily practices of our lives together in the college and thereby begun to understand education for citizenship as a more expansive and integrated aspect of our daily lives.

We have identified three consistent patterns to our work as a college that mark out a clear vision for Augsburg—a vision that is thoroughly articulated in the expansive work of Augsburg 2004 and the subsequent Access to Excellence vision documents. The three patterns—each of which also names a central intersection in our common lives—are:

We believe. We are grounded in a deep and confident Christian and Lutheran faith, and thereby we are a college freed to consider how the ideas and practices of diverse religions are central to our work. Faith is a central value, idea and practice in our life as a college. Faith and learning can never be separated from each other.

We are called. The theological idea of vocation or calling is central to how we educate students at Augsburg. Education (for whatever career a student might choose) combines with histories, experiences, commitments, faith and values to bring coherence and meaning to life in the world. We aspire to integrate this understanding of vocation into all that we do as a college. Reflection and practice can never be separated from each other in this concept of vocational education.

To serve our neighbor. Education at Augsburg is aimed at preparing our students for lives of service in the world. We live in a diverse neighborhood known as Cedar-Riverside where our neighbors are Somali and Vietnamese; we are part of a very diverse metropolitan area where our neighbors are business people and street people and ordinary people, alongside of whom we seek to make our world a better place; we are linked through our campuses around the world (Namibia, Mexico, Nicaragua, El Salvador) to our global neighbors. The gifts of faith and call lead us to service of neighbor. Our lives on campus and in the city and the world are entangled in all we do as a college.

We believe we are called to serve our neighbor. This is a statement of our vision for Augsburg College and for the vocation we embrace for the college in the years ahead. We believe we are called to serve our neighbor—a deeply Lutheran vision statement, but also deeply relevant to our work as a college. At Augsburg College, the privilege of education—through truth to freedom—carries with it the obligation to come here to learn, to live, to serve, to be an even stronger and more faithful presence in the world.

In the context of mission and vision, we then have worked to identify and explore pathways for our future work—what I call “common commitments.” These commitments are the means by which the experience and story of Augsburg College is most persuasively crafted and told. The four common commitments are:

- Living faith
- Active citizenship
- Meaningful work
- Global perspective

Each commitment captures our historic work as a college; our centers of excellence at present in curriculum, co-curriculum, faculty and student life, organizational culture, and outreach efforts; and our commitments for the future. The chart above captures visually the links between mission, vision and common commitments (all focused on students and learning!)

Augsburg Mission, Vision and Common Commitments

Another way in which we have begun to talk about this vision and common commitments is through the lens of what we call “The Augsburg Promise.” We are inviting our entire community into an “educational experience unlike any other” that is centered around the promises we make to each other—promises that at their core are about how we live as fellow citizens in this community and thereby learn how to negotiate the tensions of life together—education for citizenship.

So what are the principles of this broader civic education we offer as we learn to live out this vision? How do students, faculty, staff and others gain a civic education within and outside of an institution that has this vision for its work, this set of common commitments, this idea of the promise it makes to its students?
At the heart of our common work is an unfolding narrative that allows us to understand and negotiate the intersections of conspiracies within our institution, and thereby involve our entire community in the work of educating dual citizens. We have named five abiding principles for our lives together here at Augsburg that I would contend are the building blocks of civic education:

We work out of abundance. This is the promise of abundance in a world of scarcity—this is the promise into which we are called as God’s people. This also is the promise of civic prosperity, commonwealth, and the foundation for mature citizenship, doing things together that we cannot do as well alone.

We live with generosity. “And the Word became flesh” (John 1:14) is our historic motto. It is the generosity of our lives and whereabouts that we celebrate. It is our nature and identity and character that we lift up, our links to a particular place and culture and set of values and practices that make us Augsburg—as we have been known since 1869.

We learn through engagement. In many ways, engagement is an obvious aspect of Augsburg’s longstanding traditions of experiential education and community relations. Engagement involves both attitude and behavior. We engage each other because we are committed to learning from each other. We engage each other because together we are stronger.

We educate for service. Service is by no means an alien concept for Augsburg. In fact, our long-beloved motto, “Education for service,” is ready evidence that Augsburg has made service a central aspect of its curriculum and campus life throughout its history. Education for service focuses on service as a way of life, a set of values, a democratic ethic. It’s about a vision of democracy as a social ethic—the genius of balancing individual needs and interests with the common good.

We see things whole. “We see things whole” is a “liberal arts” way of holding our lives together in this college community in trust. Seeing things whole provides an organizational framework for planning and problem-solving that is grounded in a vision of

The Augsburg Promise

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Our regard for each other</th>
<th>An educational experience like no other</th>
<th>Opportunities to develop</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>People with Purpose:</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Identity (you are gifted)</td>
<td>- possessing unique abilities</td>
<td>Aligned experiences:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- reflecting core values</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- desiring integrity</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- pursuing fullest potential</td>
<td>Expanded Vision of World (multiple perspectives)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mission (you are called)</td>
<td>- seeking understanding</td>
<td>- facilitating discovery</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- embracing deep gladness</td>
<td>- engaging other cultures</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- attending to nature of work</td>
<td>- appreciating difference</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- meeting others’ needs</td>
<td>- exploring interdependence</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Responsibility (you are accountable)</td>
<td>- utilizing talents</td>
<td>- developing systemic view</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- attending to quality of work</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- sustaining vitality</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- caring for environment</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>- balancing individual and</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>community needs</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

We Believe We are Called to Serve our Neighbor

10 | Intersections | Spring 2009
wholeness and interrelatedness. We’re all in this together and our various voices and perspectives together best ensure our common purpose and engagement.

Here then are the guiding values, principles and practices of a community that is dedicated to an authentic civic education. Here are the practices of citizenship for democracy. We are, in a very real sense, committed to educating “dual citizens,” those who understand and practice within the broader narrative which recognizes that we must not attempt prematurely to resolve the messiness, the tensions of our lives, but instead find in those tensions the “stuff” of lively public discourse, civic literacy and engagement, and the promise of mature and meaningful common work. We are called to be people of abundance, generosity, engagement and service—people who see things whole and hold common purpose in trust—people who grasp the call to citizenship and politics as a distinctive and meaningful vocation in the world.

In the end, it is about the idea that we are what the Christian mystic Teresa of Avila called “the only body of Christ” on earth now, the Word made flesh everyday where we are found, dual citizens who understand that we must share aspirations for our lives together in our own tongues, as ambassadors whose embassies are everywhere and who will never be relieved!

Sources consulted

Berry, Wendell, What Are People For? San Francisco: North Point, 1990.

